We take turns asking each other questions and finding out more about each other. Sometimes we will make it more of a game by shooting baskets and who ever makes it in gets to ask a question or we roll a die and depending on the number rolled that person gets to ask that many questions. My kids seem to really engage with the questions on the cards and we have a lot of fun while getting to know each other a bit more. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. If you have teens they can be a tool for discussing their views and thinking about their future in a fun and relaxed way. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. KidTalk Exceeds Expectations! By Pat FodorHaving 7 and 10-year old grandsons, I'm always looking for ways to connect and communicate with them. As a result, I always make a point of asking them open-ended, non yes-or-no questions when we're together. ("What was good about your day today?" vs. "Did you have a good day today?") In this regard, KidTalk has proven itself to be a popular and practical pastime on several important levels. (1) The cards are organized by multiple subject areas, which are color-coded; so each boy alternatively picks the next question card to be answered from a different section than the preceding question. (2) Each question card has two sections: The first, longer paragraph gives context to the subject. The second, short paragraph, solicits the personal opinion of the child on that subject. So, the older brother, who's the better reader, reads the first paragraph and then hands the card to his younger brother, who reads the shorter, second paragraph. Then everyone (often we do this in the car) offers his or her response. And so on...Thanks to KidTalk, we have had so much fun and so many interesting discussions that it is now part of every road trip. In addition to helping the boys with their reading, it has inspired discussions that we may never have had! Thank you, thank you. When will Version 2 be released?

Denton True Young was nicknamed Cy. That's because his fastball was known as the "cyclone pitch." This Hall of Fame pitcher ruled the mound from 1890 to 1911. The Cy Young Award, named for him, is given every year to the best pitcher in each league. If you could create a new sports award, what would it honor? What would you name it? Why?
