A romantic, gripping, powerful, and very funny novel that lays bare the passions and battles of the people in Hollywood and New York who create the television we watch. Bright, beautiful Christine Paskins is riding the fast track as a tough TV reporter - her passion for her work rivaled only by her love for news producer Greg Lyall. But when Greg's uncompromising dream of power is brought tantalizingly close by the attentions of the CEO's socialite daughter, their lives explode in a tangle of passion and heartbreak, dreams and desires, love and betrayal that spans a decade.

I knew it was an exciting business, this television, but didn't realize how exciting till Star Time.Amiel has it all together...the intrigue, the tension, the long hard climb, and the quick fall.It's all there, plus a terrific love story. You'll never look at television the same way again. ~Regis Philbin, Former Co-Host of Regis KellyStar Timeis terrific and terribly real.This is television! There were easily four or five times I was jolted in mid-scene by the recollection of having been there.~Buzz Kulik, Director of Jackie Collins'Lucky/Chances, George Washington, Brian's SongFrom the AuthorHaving been a lawyer and executive in the entertainment industry, I wanted to bring readers inside the world of network television to reveal the ambitions, hopes, and treacheries of everyone from top executives seeking to climb to top of the company to producers and writers desperate to get their shows on the air. As serious as so many of these situations were, many were also wildly funny to an objective observer, and I tried to depict those with the kind of searing humor I hoped would allow the reader to enjoy both sides of this very human comedy.About the AuthorJoseph Amiel is an internationally best-selling novelist, screenwriter, web series creator, and lawyer.
