By KrisGood set of tarock cards (standard 54-count, for four players). This deck is bigger than the other deck I've played with (which was the size of a standard deck of playing cards) - closer, maybe, to traditional tarot cards than playing cards. I like the size: it makes you feel a little classier than playing a game with Hoyles or Bicycles. I'm a bit mystified by some of the other reviews: the imagery is nice and ornate, and not at all fuzzy to my eyes. I found the printing and finish to be comparable to other printed cards; that is, not as crisp as you'd find in, say, an expensive hardback photography book. But not fuzzy. It's a deck of cards, and is appropriately printed, and coated in plastic. The deck also came with instructions on how to play - a nice to have, but not something you'd expect from any deck of cards. There are internet instructions and entire books printed for that purpose. So yeah, I'm pretty happy with this deck of the cards.

By sorinThe cards I got are ok for the money I spent. I would also recommend buying another brand - PIATNIK. But overall I am satisfied with this order. The material and the colors of the cards are ok.

The deck includes 22 trump cards that feature double-ended scenes. The 32 suit cards are uniquely dispersed-including King, Queen, Knight, and Page in each of the four suits, numbers 7 to 10 represented in the black suits, and numbers 1 to 4 represented in the red suits. Complete with instructions by John McLeod for 3 and 4 players.
