By Wendy Miller We homeschool, and this game provides a fun way to learn a lot about various artists. Using the different categories to determine who gets the cards makes the info stick in your head, and the cards provide a great jumping off point to learn who various artists are and look into them in more depth. It's a great game and lots of fun.

By Sara R. Great illustrations, I don't think it's meant for children. It's more like an adult's collectible. Great quality, beautiful product. Couldn't be happier, if you are into art you'll find this brilliant. 1 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Thought it would be fun for exploring artists with kids By Kindle Customer Not what I expected. Thought it would be fun for exploring artists with kids. Might be fun for very art knowledgeable group of adults but doesn't lend itself to learning, whether you are an adult or child.

Piet Mondrian or Andy Warhol Damien Hirst or Banksy whose artworks have been the most influential? The most shocking? The most expensive? How about their versatility or critical reception? These playing cards allow art lovers of all ages to play their favorite artists against each other to discover who rules the art world.

"A new way to look at, enjoy and understand contemporary art that should find its way onto Christmas displays throughout the realm." - The Bookseller "Who is the most shocking? The most influential? The most expensive? Prepare to be top-trumped." - Red Magazine "Hockney and Bourgeois go head-to-head for the most beautiful and it's a face-off between Picasso, Mondrian and Hirst for the ultimate 'shock of the new' effect. Now you can pit legendary artists against each other in a card game for art lovers." - The Guardian "Long journeys will never be boring again if you pack these art trump cards." - Stylist About the Author James Cahill is an art writer based in London, who contributes to Elephant, Apollo, The Burlington Magazine, and frieze.
